

Generally, a mother has a significant influence on children and how they are raised in a family. to this end/For this purpose it is obvious that she needs to devote a considerable portion of her time to raising the family. This means less available time for undertaking other tasks/doing jobs, which leads concludes to a lower income. The Government as a critical factor can play a key role here.

Being not financially supported, mothers will have less time to spend on raising their family. The impact of mothers on how the family is brought up/raising the family and consequently in the growth of society is undeniable. I believe that there are no replacements for their influence on-in this case. Of course when children reach to a certain age, mothers' direct influence will decrease on them. At this point/period mothers can have full time jobs like any other person. But until then we have to make sure that mothers can perform/shoulder this burden/do this duty right. Financial concerns should be reduced as much as possible. Otherwise it is not be possible for them to make this crucial duty happen. This becomes/gets highly important when it comes to single mothers who are to rear/raise children. It is obvious that life is impossible without a reasonable income.

Financial support doesn't does not have to be a direct payment necessarily. In some cases by setting out appropriate laws, support for of mothers can be guaranteed. For instance there should be a law which allocates a portion of husband's income to the mother if she is to stay at home raising kids. However, in successful marriages, with the by existence of real love this would not become an issue, but when necessary, laws can be applied. It is obvious that we will not turn to legal approaches unless we find ourselves incapable of solving a matter. Let's illustrate this a bit. Suppose a father in a family allocates a big amount of his income to drinks. The Mother as a house wife cannot have a pleasant leisure time because of money lacking. This can be an example where love cannot be a solution. Consequently, the mother will have to ask the court/file a lawsuit/litigate/file a complaint/legal department to mitigate the condition.

In addition, there should be occupations which moms are prior in getting them. In this way to some extent their worries for financial matters can be reduced. Also by allocating a monthly payment to mothers from the taxes collected by the government we can alleviate this case too.

In conclusion, I agree that in some cases the government is able to and should support mothers. Mothers have significant impact on building/creating raising the a healthy society. Therefore, their financial worries should be minimized/reduced as much as possible. Eespecially single mothers who have to cope with various problems and difficulties.
