

There are many types of music in the world today. Why do we need music? Is the traditional music of a country more important and should it be preserved or is international music that is heard everywhere nowadays more useful to a society?

With evermore improvements in technology and musical instruments, it is quite usual to enjoy different types of music of different nations. People of different interests and taste opt for a variety of music styles. Music has always been an advocate friend for human beings in gratitude and sorrow, and it is almost impossible to deny the role it plays in our daily life.

During /throughout the history, music and human beings have walked two abreast on in distinct occasions. I firmly believe that, music is the spirit of life. It can inculcate both calmness and liveliness into individuals. Not only can music make people go frenzy, it can also color life more enjoyable. Furthermore, majority of people cannot eschew music in their life. They breathe the music and make a living from it. On the other hand, music plays a crucial role in the movie industry as well. I am in consummate agreement that the movie industry would not reach its climax without the music by its side.

Music is the radiation of the culture. Notions of different countries are revealed via their music. One can realize if people are hawkish or dovish through the melody they are dancing with. Traditional music of a country is the pure symbol and mirror of the society and its background. It radiates what people have gone through at one time. Although However traditional music is important and should be preserved for the aforementioned reasons, international and new music styles are reputable. Most of them are the echo of the youth of today who are the investments of each country. Those who choose music, for instance the rap style, to (get it off their chest)/to relieve themselves are not at the minority and should be respected.

By and large, the importance of music in our daily life is undeniable. Different music styles are enlightening cultural diversities of each society. It is vital to bow to the distinctions as life is more beautiful and meaningful in this way.
